
INSTITUTIONALISED

You've got used to it. Nobody can stand these walls, at first. Then you begin to respect them, and in time you come to love them. You have a place here, a routine, a world with a beginning and an end. Everyone dreams of getting out, but they're all afraid, even if they try to hide it. Because once they're out of jail they'll just be ex-convicts: Old, unfit and unwanted.

What is your favourite time of day?

Is there somebody out there who has stopped coming to visit?

Do you think you're rehabilitated? What does that mean to you?
